Who We Are

We are authors, journalists, teachers, retired professors of literature, memoirists, archivists, corporate communicators, actors, editors, stand-up comics, songwriters and photographers. Just plain folk. We’ve been seen in regional, national and international literary journals, trade and leisure magazines, and newspapers. We read our work at literary venues, attend writers’ conferences, book festivals, retreats and fairs. We take writing classes, struggle with writer’s block and rejection letters, dream of what it would be like to have enough time to write, to get published. Some of us have done this too—had books or chapbooks published by large New York companies, by small independent presses, by self-publishers. We are writers and readers and we number more than 500. You’ll find a comrade in ink, a soul mate in literature, and you’ll be an important part of the world of storytellers. Please take a moment to join and support the coastal writing community.
